Caution—Soft Shoulders!

No, it's not a roadside warning to motorists: It's a fashion prediction for teens. We've been previewing your spring and summer dresses and we think it's time to tell you that fashion is going to give you the cold shoulder this year. You can start looking for these style trends in your favorite teen department any day now.

Off-Shoulder—Nothing could be dreamier than a printed cotton or rayon dress with widely cut neckline that can be worn off-shoulder style. We call it the "Angelface" neckline, and not because it makes your wings stick out, either.

Japs Infest Filipino Isle: Army Unit Sent

MANILA — An entire Philippine army unit has been dispatched to Leyte island in the mouth of Ormoc bay to clean out Japanese remnants of the 26th division, which was annihilated by Filipino guerrillas.

Brig. Gen. Macario Peralta, Philippine army chief of staff, said the unit, under Lieut. Col. Irwin Beasley, Jr., would be detailed to help the Filipinos and Americans already on the island to mop up the remaining Japanese. Beasley, formerly attached to the Philippine army, is now serving with the Philippine army.

Peralta's announcement was made after Lieut. Gen. Masaharu Homma, Japanese commander in the Philippines, was reported to have arrived in Manila to comb the jungle.

Seek Secrets of North Country

Snowmobile Caravan Travels to Arctic Circle to Study Problems.

WASHINGTON. — Despite many years of exploration Canada's vast northlands still hold far too many mysteries to suit military men.

Having in mind the importance of the great winter battles fought in Russia during the war just ended, and also the strategic importance of the north country in modern aviation, Canada's army and air force are about to begin a spectacular joint expedition to solve some of these still puzzling Arctic problems.

A moving force of 45 army personnel is traveling in 12 newly designed snowmobiles over a 3,100-mile semi-circle from the southern shore of Hudson bay north to far above the arctic circle and within a few miles of the north magnetic pole, westward through the northwest territories toward the Yukon, and finally south through British Columbia and Alberta to Edmonton.

In 80 days they will pass through three seasons, winter, spring and early summer, hit temperatures of 60 degrees below zero, and travel across territory where white man never has ventured before without heavy loss of life. It is to be called "Exercise Muskox," named after an animal found in the north country, says the Chicago Tribune.

Operate From 13 Bases.

The moving force will operate from 13 bases along the route which will be supplied and manned by the royal Canadian air force. The airmen will put base personnel on the ground in leap-frog fashion ahead of the moving ground force, and will stand ready to aid the moving force in event of emergency along the way.

Although the moving force with its armored snowmobiles will number only 45 men, another 250 men will take part, including army base personnel and a total ground and air force of another 145 men.

In addition, because of the intense non-Canadian interest in the experiment, four United States army technical experts will be along and one British arctic specialist.

The army, disturbed at some interpretations which were put on the expedition when it was first announced and which suggested it was a defense exercise, stresses that the expedition is "non-tactical, with no troops taking part who are not specialists and no weapons larger than rifles being carried."

May Aid Civilians.

The army and the air force hope that the lessons learned will aid civilians as much as the military. Meteorologists are to be benefited not only with data brought back from the expedition itself, but by lessons learned in supplying northern bases which the meteorologists want to establish in increasing numbers.

In particular, the army says, it is hoped the expedition will demonstrate:

1. The new snowmobiles developed for invading Norway.

2. The technique of large scale air supply.

3. New and improved methods of navigating and surveying near the north magnetic pole where magnetic compasses are useless.

4. The latest arctic clothing made of textiles, so that the killing of caribou for fur clothes is unnecessary.

U. S. Shipbuilding Firm Armed 4 Huge Troopships

NEW YORK. — The Allies' four largest troop transports—the Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mary, the Aquitania and Mauretania — were armed and converted in New York harbor, the shipbuilding division of Bethlehem Steel company revealed.

The company disclosed for the first time it handled 37,778 ships during the war years, totalling 302,224,000 tons, more than five times greater than the world's prewar merchant fleet and more than 25 times larger than the American merchant marine in 1938. The ships included almost every type of warship in addition to merchantmen.

The Queen ships alone were reported to have moved 800,000 American troops to Europe.

Musk Ox Arctic Force Moves 6 Miles an Hour

CHURCHILL, MANITOBA. — The Canadian army's motorized musk ox force has set a six mile an hour pace on the first leg of its 3,100 mile arctic tour. A radio report filed six hours after the 12 snow vehicles started from here said the party was 36 miles north of Churchill. The journey will take the force near the magnetic pole.

French Sign Pact Giving Autonomy to Cambodia

PARIS. — Autonomy in administration was granted to the French colony of Cambodia in Indo-China, according to a treaty signed recently by the king of Cambodia and Thierry d'Argenlieu, French high commissioner. The treaty specified that administration will be transferred to native hands and that only a skeleton staff of French officials will be retained in the capacity of advisers.

RESOLUTION

In the natural order of things all the world is making changes. In the history of Liberty Church leaders who have served both as laymen and pastors have come and gone.

We have come face to face with another ging in the decision of our pastor, Rev. H. Fred rick Jones to retire in the near future. In making this announcement the membership was taken by complete surprise and his action was entirely due to reasons best known to himself, but since in making his public announcement he has made it clear that his decision is irrevocable, we therefore move to accept his resignation to be effective by November of this year at the time he has designated.

In taking this action we desire to express to Brother Jones and his wife and family our deep appreciation for six years of untiring service in the pulpit and in the matter of personal visitation.

His sermons have been of such a type that his congregations have grown thus showing their appreciation of his pulpit ability.

In person relations, he has never failed to respond to any opportunity to visit the sick in the homes of, in the hospitals, often making long drives to minister to the sick and often taking some floral token in the form of flowers or fruit to make practical his interest.

In times of distress when sorrow has come because of death he has ever been ready to comfort the bereaved and has been gifted with an unusual ability to say just those things which would offer greatest solace to the sorrowing.

The church has grown in membership and in gifts to missions during his present pastorate and we accept this severing relationship of pastor and people with assurance of our deep love and interest in the future of pastor and his wife who like him has been a most earnest and untiring partner in every interest of the church and a loyal leader in the various departments of the womens' work.

May his remaining years of life give him yet much more of opportunity for the Master is our sincere prayer.

—Liberty Baptist Church.

Attacks on Allies In Mail to Germany

More Pupils Than Text Books Are Now Available

NEW YORK — Schools and colleges will be short of textbooks at least until the end of 1946, book publishers predicted.

The unprecedented urge for education has swamped the textbook publishers already running behind due to paper shortage and inadequate press facilities. They say the peak demand in September cannot be met.

G.I.s are pouring into any college with room for them and if the draft ends in May the 18-year-olds who now expect to go to camp will also be lining up for the scarce books.

Publishers are diverting paper from other books normally printed in an attempt to supply textbooks for veterans in high schools, vocational schools and colleges, particularly in the engineering and technical fields, a member of the national conference of business paper editors said recently.

As a result, the shortage is being felt in the secondary and elementary schools, too, although enrollments there are foreseeable, a spokesman of the American Textbook Publishers institute said.

Coast Guard Radio Scores Assist in Maternity Case

NORFOLK, VA.—The coast guard was asked to radio instructions on how to deliver a baby and the result was successful—mother and child are doing nicely

The radio call for aid was received by coast guard headquarters here from the SS Richard K. Call, about 400 miles southeast of Cape Henry, which said that a passenger was about to give birth to a baby.

Instructions were obtained by the coast guard from the U. S. marine hospital and radioed to the vessel. Later the ship messaged that the infant and mother, whose name was not given, were safe.

French Speed Up Rail Rebuilding

Tremendous Damage Is Being Repaired Rapidly.

PARIS.—Despite the tremendous damage suffered by France's railroads during the war, reconstruction has been proceeding rapidly

Officials in charge of the program are pointing to 1946 as the year which should see a near turn to prewar normalcy.

Gains have been made despite the fact France has been suffering from the most acute shortage of coal in its history, besides a shortage of almost every kind of material needed in the reconstruction job.

In September, 1944, the railroads seemed almost beyond hope of repair. Not a single phase of the system had escaped damage.

Locomotives, freight and passenger cars, tracks, stations, freight yards, bridges, repair shops, sidings—all had been seriously damaged.

Out of a total of 17,000 locomotives which France had in 1939, 11,800 remained following the liberation.

Only 2,900 of these were usable. Today there are 12,800 engines in France, 8,100 of which are in running order.

Damaged locomotives are being repaired at the rate of 100 per month.

To rebuild further their depleted stock of engines the French have placed orders in America and Canada for 1,340 engines, with deliveries expected during 1946.

Before the war there were approximately 460,000 freight cars. Only 230,000 remained following liberation. But today the French are repairing their damaged cars at the rate of 2,000 per month.

Stations are to be considerably enlarged, while repair shops will be strategically located throughout France and furnished with the latest equipment.

About 40 of the big rail yards were destroyed up to 80 per cent or more during the war. Today these yards are approximately 75 per cent repaired. Some of them are actually handling more cars today than they did in 1943.

Throughout their repair of all installations, especially destroyed stations, depots and repair shops, the French are modernizing.
